A Round Rock Market Option for Growers and Makers

Farmer George's Round Rock Farmers Market lists a Saturday schedule and invites growers, makers and other local businesses to apply. Here's what its published vendor information says to check before planning a market day.

For Round Rock growers, makers, bakers and other local businesses, a farmers market can be one way to test selling in person. Farmer George's Round Rock Farmers Market publishes both a regular Saturday schedule and vendor application information, giving prospective sellers a starting point for weighing the option.

The market's website lists Saturdays, year-round, from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. at Rock Creek Center, 2111 IH-35 N, Round Rock. It says the market closes on Christmas Day. The next Saturday on the listed schedule after Nov. 3, 2026, is Nov. 7. The schedule is the market's published information, not a guarantee against day-of changes, so check with management before making plans.

The vendor application asks applicants to provide a product list and indicate whether they make or grow their products, resell Texas-made products, or advertise a local Texas business. That gives a potential vendor a practical first task: describe what they plan to offer and how it fits the application categories. Applying does not reserve a booth; market management reviews applications.

The published standards also describe a drop-in option. It has a $50 annual fee plus $60 per market day, requires one week's advance notice and depends on available space. A vendor must receive confirmation before attending. The market says fees and terms vary by vendor category, so the drop-in figures should not be treated as a universal price or as proof that space is currently available.

A sensible plan is to read the current application and standards, prepare an accurate product list, and ask management which vendor category and terms apply before budgeting for a date. Allow for the stated advance notice, and do not treat an application as approval or a confirmed booth. The market's vendor page says management reviews applications; its published information does not establish current availability for a particular seller or Saturday.

The market also describes a Sunday Artisan Market as "coming soon," without an announced opening date or location. Prospective vendors should not rely on it as an operating sales opportunity until the market publishes those details.
